16 Plaintiff Carl Wescott, proceeding pro se, hereby opposes the Defendant's Motion to 17 Strike the Plaintiff's Sur-Reply and in support of his Motion, the Plaintiff offers this concise 18 Memorandum of Points & Authorities.

19
20
21 1. Introduction

22 The Plaintiff will aim to be brief so as to conserve judicial resources and not further
23 provoke Defense counsel whose blood pressure appears to have been already dangerously
24 elevated by a proposed eight-paged Sur-Reply.

25 The Plaintiff and his ex-wife decided to part ways in an environment in which they were 26 cash-constrained. They agreed to hire one lawyer to negotiate a settlement in an effort to save on 27 divorce transaction costs.
28

1 As the Bible enjoins us, no man (nor woman) can serve two masters, for s/he will surely 2 hold to the one one and despise the other. Matthew 6:24. In this case, Defendant Harris held to 3 Defendant Stephens and despised the Plaintiff. Leading him to believe she was advising him
4 about the law she instructed the Plaintiff that $15,000 per month was the minimum for support
5 and maintenance and that he should pay her fees directly for the service of so informing him.
6 Matters careened downhill from there.

8 The Plaintiff has alleged that the Defendants misused the trust and confidence he reposed
9 in both of them to lie about the law, and about certain material facts, and place him at a 10 tremendous disadvantage financially and in the posture of his divorce case. The Defendant has 11 interposed many defenses including the litigation privilege, the right to conduct petitioning
12 activity and the statute of limitations.
13

14 One of the Plaintiff's causes of action was violation of the Fair Debt Collection Practices
15 Act. The Defense inserted a new argument into its reply in connection with that Act. The 16 Plaintiff sought Leave to File a Sur-Reply in which he admittedly addressed more arguments
17 than the single new one. But the Plaintiff does not believe that the Defendant's Motion is proper 18 as submitted.
19

21 2. The Defendant's Motion is Not Proper Under 12(f)

22 As a threshold matter, the Defendant's Motion to Strike is nearly unhinged in tone and 23 engages in personal recrimination all out of proportion to the alleged offense (which is distilled 24 to wantonly attaching a document to another document): a Motion For Leave to File an Eight-
25 paged Sur-Reply.

26 Thus, the Defendant's MPA states at p. 1:

27 This is only the most recent example of Wescott's obsessive tendency to bury courts with 28 frivolous filings in his pursuit to harass his ex-wife (Defendant Monette Stephens) and her divorce attorney (Harris).

1 The Plaintiff will restrain his obsessiveness as reflected in the 8-paged avalanche he
2 previously unleashed on the Court and counsel and will not reply in kind, even though such 3 language from the Defendant might itself be regarded as “impertinent” or “scandalous” within 4 the meaning of 12 (f). The parties are not fond of each other, which is sad. But it is 5 unprofessional for a lawyer to project personal rancor in his filings.

7 Because Courts construe pleadings liberally, a Motion to Strike pursuant to Rule 12(f) is 8 not commonly granted. In re TheMart.com, Inc. Securities Litigation, 114 F.Supp.2d 955, 965
9 (C.D. Cal. 2000). The same Court commented on the Movant’s burden:
10

11 “Immaterial” means that the matter has no bearing on the controversy before the 12 court. . . . If there is any doubt as to whether the allegations might be an issue in 13 the action, courts will deny the motion. . . . “Impertinent” has been defined as 14 allegations that are not responsive or irrelevant to the issues that arise in the action
15 and which are inadmissible as evidence.

16 Thus, an “impertinent” allegation might well be that the Plaintiff in this case is obsessed
17 with harassing the Defendants. But the Defendant’s problem with the Plaintiff’s Sur-Reply isn’t 18 that it was impertinent or immaterial but rather that the Plaintiff got some extra shots in 19 (Defendants claim “no new arguments” were made on p. 4 of their MPA).

20 The Defendant makes picky and prolix arguments that do not begin to establish that the 21 arguments in Plaintiff’s proposed Sur-Reply are improper under the standard of 12(f). For 22 example, the Defendant attempts to hold the Plaintiff to a five paged limit provided in the local 23 rules for an Objection to Reply Evidence which may be filed without leave. But the Plaintiff did
24 not file an Objection to Reply Evidence and he sought leave to file his Sur-Reply. The local rules
25 do not apply a five-paged limit to a Sur-Reply that is to be filed only with leave. The Plaintiff
26 thanks the Defendant for making him aware that some Courts think it to be improper to attach a
27 proposed Sur-Reply to Motion For Leave to File, but there is no such Rule in this District and it
28 did not occur to the Plaintiff that his proposed Sur-Reply would act like an attractive nuisance

1 and irresistibly focus the attention of the Court. The Plaintiff asks the Defendant's attorney to 2 make up his mind: is he creating an avalanche of new work through his obsessive filings or is he
3 mesmerizing the Court with his brazen attachments?

4 The Plaintiff offered pertinent, material, non-scandalous and relevant arguments in his 5 Sur-Reply. Accordingly, 12(f) is simply not the proper vehicle for opposing it. It may be better to 6 treat the Defendant's argument as an Opposition to the Plaintiff's request that he be permitted to 7 file the Sur-Reply in question.

10 3. The Defendant is in Error: Sur-Replies are Not Disfavored in Every Case

11 The Plaintiff will engage this Court candidly. If a litigant scans tens of thousands of 12 reported cases over seven or eight decades of modern practice, the litigant will find a range of 13 attitudes on the part of District Courts toward Sur-Replies. This is the sort of issue on which 14 Trial Judges are afforded the widest possible latitude. Defense counsel diligently uncovered
15 cases in which Sur-Replies were "disfavored". The Plaintiff, despite being at a cavernous 16 disadvantage in education, legal experience, resources and vocabulary has – perhaps with the 17 benefit of his obsessiveness – uncovered cases in which Courts believed Leave to File Sur-
18 replies should be liberally granted. St. Clair Intellectual Property Consultants, Inc. v. Samsung
19 Electronics Co. Ltd. et al., C.A. No. 12-69-LPS (D. Del. Mar. 29, 2013); Sur-Replies should be 20 liberally allowed. King v. Knoll, 399 F.Supp.2nd 1169, 1174-75 (D.Kan. 2005). Indeed, some 21 Courts have given preference to Sur-Replies filed by Plaintiffs in the context of Motion Practice
22 as part of the policy of construing the Complaint liberally. Robinson v. Farmers services LLC
23 No.-cv-02244 2010 WL 4067180 (D. Kan October 15, 2010). Thus the Robinson Court accepted
24 a Sur-Reply even after finding that the Defense had not truly made a new argument in its reply.
25

27 It is this last argument that the Plaintiff would urge upon the Court, without the 28

1 concession concerning the Defendant's FDCPA argument that was indeed new. The Plaintiff is
2 not a professional drafter of Complaints, nor polished crafter of arguments. He is a programmer
3 (as in software engineer) learning law as he goes. The Defendant did offer a new and rather 4 confusing argument in her Reply brief to the effect that she needed to be employed by an original
5 creditor in order to be liable under the Fair Debt Collection Practices Act. On the other hand, in 6 an abundance of candor, the Plaintiff's arguments ranged beyond the new argument inserted by 7 the Defendant.

9 That conceded, the Defendant's Motion to Strike is unsupported in law as is her poorly
10 articulated request that the Plaintiff be prohibited from filing any document with the Court
11 without a pre-filing application. This appears to be a short-cut to having the Plaintiff declared a 12 vexatious litigant in the 9th Circuit. The hurdle for such a designation is high; far higher than it is 13 in the State Court system, Ringgold-Lockhart v. County of Los Angeles, 761 F.3rd (9th Cir.
14 2014). The Defendant's request in this respect is grossly improper.
15

16 17 4. Conclusion

18 The Plaintiff owes Defense counsel thanks not only for pointing out that in 1975 in New 19 York it was considered a faux pas to attach a Sur-Reply to a Motion For Leave to File a Sur-
20 Reply (even though it appears to be the convention to attach prospective filings in most other 21 cases) but also for focusing such a blinding spotlight on the Plaintiff's Sur-Reply with counsel's
22 hyperbole and invective. Defense counsel seems to think that a Court will not be able to resist
23 perusing any document attachment; if he is correct, how could a Court be able to resist perusing
24 a document that the Defendant scorns so vituperatively? See, Feresten, Spike The Little Kicks, 25 Seinfeld Episode 138, October 10, 1996 (Elaine forbids a co-worker to see George because he is 26 "bad" thereby making George irresistible to the co-worker). Plaintiff's less subtle strategy will be 27
28

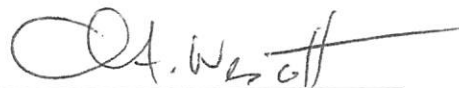

1 to ignore any document he does not want emphasized.

2 The Plaintiff hopes that his eight paged Sur-Reply will prove to be helpful and
3 illuminating to this Court and asks that the Court consider its contents in aid of liberally
4 construing the complaint in this case. Should the Court decline to accept or review the Plaintiff's
5 Sur-Reply any Order to Strike would be moot and it would be unwarranted by Rule 12(f) itself as 6 the Sur-Reply is not immaterial or impertinent. It is not redundant – at least not in whole – as it
7 addresses at least one new and novel argument by the Defendant.

9 The Plaintiff has sustained heavy damages because he effectively accepted the legal 10 advice and direction of a disguised adversary. Lawyers are understandably clothed with the 11 privileges necessary to do their jobs but their jobs do not extend to defrauding their opponents, 12 especially into thinking that they are joint clients. Lawyers (Defendant Michelle Harris) are also 13 not supposed to steal their clients' (or adversaries, for that matter) property: Ms. Harris still has 14 the Plaintiff's computing equipment, as per the testimony under oath of her co-Defendant Ms.
15 Stephens (on October 13th, 2016). Even for this pro se opponent, it is clear that this is 16 "conversion," which has not only civil but criminal implications ("larceny"). While the laws
17 regarding conversion and larceny seem relatively simple, the law in the area of attorneys
18 defrauding clients and adversaries is complex. The opposition, if not exactly "obsessive" is 19 tenacious and learned and has thrown the kitchen sink at the complaint.

22 The Plaintiff humbly requests that this Court err on the side of liberality in construing his 23 arguments. The Motion to Strike should be denied.

24 RESPECTFULLY SUBMITTED on March 23rd, 2018.
